INTRODUCTION

In India, the traditional practice of elderly care within joint families is declining, with more seniors moving into age care homes due to the rise of nuclear families and high living costs. This shift has led to the proliferation of old age homes providing social, emotional, and physical care for seniors living alone. These homes come in two varieties: free and paid. Free old age homes are typically run by charitable organizations or the government, offering basic amenities and care to those who cannot afford to pay. Paid old age homes, on the other hand, provide a range of services, often including better facilities, medical care, and recreational activities, for which residents or their families pay a fee. Despite having children, many elderly are left to live in these institutions. There are over 1,660 old age homes across India, mostly in the south, with 47 located in Mangalore alone. Financial difficulties and lack of emotional support often compel the elderly to seek residence in these homes, which are becoming crucial support systems for them. In paid old age homes, residents generally receive a higher standard of care and more comfort, while free homes cater to those in need, ensuring no elderly person is left without support. This case study delves into the daily life and management of an aged care home in Mangalore, providing a personal glimpse into the experiences of its residents and staff. Through this exploration, we aim to uncover the unique challenges and triumphs faced by the elderly in India. Comparing these findings with international aged care systems will offer a broader perspective on how cultural, economic, and social factors influence elderly care. As noted in a previous study, "By examining these dynamics, we hope to identify best practices and areas for improvement to better support the aging population in India (Gupta, A., Mohan, U., Tiwari, S. C., & Singh, V. K., 2014). Geriatric care in India: A long way to go: Tripathy, J. P. (2014) & J Midlife Health, 5(4), 205–206."

The Bethany Sisters, who manage the home, are committed to addressing the physical, emotional, and social needs of the elderly."

St. Anthony's Home for the Aged

Another notable institution is St. Anthony's Home for the Aged, which has been providing care for elderly individuals in Mangalore for several decades. This home is known for its comprehensive care programs that include medical services, social activities, and personalized care plans. The home aims to create a homely atmosphere where residents feel secure and valued.

Little Sisters of the Poor

The Little Sisters of the Poor also operate a well-respected age care home in Mangalore. Their facility is dedicated to providing compassionate care to the elderly, particularly those from economically disadvantaged backgrounds. The home offers a variety of services, including healthcare, accommodation, and social engagement activities. The emphasis is on creating a community where the elderly can live with dignity and joy.

Challenges Faced by Age Care Homes

Age care homes in Mangalore, like many across India, face several challenges. These include funding constraints, staffing shortages, and the need for continuous training for caregivers. Additionally, there is a cultural expectation that families should care for their elderly relatives, which can sometimes lead to underutilization of these facilities. However, with increasing urbanization and changing family dynamics, the role of age care homes is becoming more critical.

India is undergoing a rapid demographic transition with increasing life expectancy and declining birth rates, leading to a growing elderly population. Despite early recognition of the need for social security, with schemes like the Employees Provident Fund and the Public Provident Fund, coverage remains inadequate, reaching only 11% of the working population. Project OASIS was initiated by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment to address old age income security through comprehensive reform. The project, led by a committee chaired by Surendra A. Dave, emphasizes the need for increased coverage, better returns on investments, and the introduction of new contributory pension schemes. It highlights the importance of professional fund management, improved governance, and public awareness to ensure sufficient savings for old age. Recommendations include phasing out government subsidies, enhancing existing provident fund systems, and creating a competitive annuity market. The overarching goal is to establish a robust framework for economic security during old age, reducing reliance on traditional family support systems and mitigating poverty risks among the elderly.

Old age homes in India have gained importance due to the migration of young couples to cities or abroad for better job opportunities, leading to the alienation of elders. Conflicts between generations and the inability of some elders to care for themselves further necessitate these homes. Two main types of old age homes exist: free homes for destitute elders providing basic necessities and medical care, and paid homes, which are becoming popular as retirement homes, offering comprehensive services for a fee.

Location, Design, and Staffing of Old Age Homes in India

Old age homes should be situated in calm, pollution-free environments, either rural or urban, depending on resident preferences. Design considerations include dormitory-style, independent rooms, or cottages, with well-ventilated spaces and facilities ideally on the ground floor. Necessary features include rough-floored bathrooms with support railings, a sick room, and recreation and medical care rooms. Essential staff includes an administrator, clerks, nursing staff, cooks, and a part-time medical officer, nutritionist, and social worker. Medical care should ensure the availability of essential medicines and equipment, with transport for emergencies. Additional amenities such as recreational facilities, internet access, and opportunities for resident participation in daily activities are also important.

The Karnataka State Police provides information and support for senior citizens on their FAQ page. It addresses common concerns such as legal protections under the Maintenance and Welfare of Parents and Senior Citizens Act 2007, how to handle harassment from relatives, and ways to seek police protection. Senior citizens can also register with the Seva Sindhu portal for continuous monitoring and support from local police. For immediate assistance, they can dial 112.

The elderly population in India is increasing rapidly and is expected to triple by 2050, as per the 2011 census. While healthcare improvements have enhanced physical health, subjective well-being among the elderly remains underexplored. This study aims to assess the quality of life (QoL) among elderly individuals residing in family homes versus old age homes. An analytical cross-sectional study was conducted with elderly participants above 60 years, utilizing the World Health Organization-BREF QoL questionnaire. Among the participants, 56.3% were male, and 43.8% were aged 70–79 years. Results showed no significant difference in QoL between those living in old age homes and those living with families, though there was a slight, non-significant increase in psychological, social, and environmental domains for those in old age homes. The study concludes that QoL should be examined with a greater focus on psychological, social, and environmental factors.
