SJIF Impact Factor (2025): 8.688| ISI I.F. Value: 1.241| Journal DOI: 10.36713/epra2016 ISSN: 2455-7838(Online)
EPRA International Journal of Research and Development (IJRD)
Volume: 10 | Issue: 6 | June 2025 - Peer Reviewed Journal

ZOOLOGY THROUGH THE AGES: FOUNDATIONS AND FRONTIERS IN MODERN SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY

Dr Medhavi Sudarshan
Assistant Professor & Head, Department of Zoology, J N L College, Khagaul,Patliputra University, Patna, Bihar, India

Article DOI: https://doi.org/10.36713/epra22343
DOI No: 10.36713/epra22343

ABSTRACT
From early naturalistic observations, zoology—the scientific study of animals—has developed into a vital component of contemporary biological research. It has been essential in revealing the mechanisms underlying ecological interactions, evolutionary processes, and organismal function. Developments in genetics, computer technology, and molecular biology have greatly enhanced the discipline throughout time. In this paper, the historical evolution of zoology is reviewed, significant discoveries are highlighted, and contemporary frontiers including integrative genomics, conservation science, synthetic biology, and bioinformatics are investigated. As the post-genomic age progresses, zoology remains crucial for addressing complex biological and environmental issues.
KEYWORDS: Scientific, Evolutionary Process, Organismal Function, Genomics, Bioinformatics, Synthetic

INTRODUCTION
Modern science, including biology, has a complex past due to cultural, historical, and intellectual influences, and constant evolution, making it challenging to trace the exact origins of scientific ideas. Preparing a historical narrative of biology is an exciting endeavour because this issue is of interest to both academics and laypeople Examining the body of knowledge on the topic of "old sciences," including biological sciences, reveals the presence of several approaches of perspective. The understandable matter is whether ancient information should be referred to as "scientific knowledge." Zoology, derived from the Greek zōion (animal) and logos (study), is among the oldest branches of natural science. The purpose of zoology, the study of animals, is to comprehend the entirety of all animal and animal population traits. Anatomy, physiology, genetics, and interdependence are all aspects of zoology Early societies noted animal anatomy and behaviour for philosophical investigation, myth-making, and survival. Biological sciences entered a new phase of growth after the discovery of DNA as the fundamental genetic material some decades ago. Several scientists and historians have sought to search for ancient beginnings in the context of modern achievements. Over millennia, zoology evolved from descriptive cataloguing to a robust empirical science. In the 21st century, advances in genomics, imaging technologies, and systems biology have redefined zoological research, integrating it closely with disciplines such as molecular biology, ecology, and evolutionary science.

HISTORICAL FOUNDATIONS
Ancient and Classical Zoology
Animal representations served as the foundation for early hunter-gatherer societies' zoological knowledge, demonstrating an awareness of fauna, behaviour, anatomy, and habitat for both survival and exploitation. exploitation [1]. However, zoology first became a recognized field in Ancient Greece. In his book Historia Animalium, Aristotle (384–322 BCE), who is known as the father of zoology, painstakingly listed more than 500 animal species [2]. He classified animals according to similar behavioral and anatomical characteristics in his groundbreaking work, which focused on real observation and comparative analysis. Aristotle's methodical approach transformed scientific research by prioritizing factual data and logical reasoning. It established the foundation for contemporary investigation through testing, observation, and tested hypotheses [3,4]. His contributions set the stage for further advances in evolutionary biology, anatomy, and taxonomy. By recording species, anatomy, behavior, and habitats in their encyclopaedic work Naturalis Historia, Pliny the Elder and Roman naturalists made significant contributions to the field of zoology and laid the groundwork for subsequent scientific investigations. Given the lack of scientific discipline of the time, Pliny's descriptions frequently combined empirical facts with myth and folklore, despite the fact that he included a vast variety of animal species. Al-Jahiz (776–868 CE) wrote the ground-breaking Book of Animals (Kitab al-Hayawan) during the Islamic Golden Age, centuries later. It included animal behaviours, adaptability, and the effects of the environment on species. His observations were a major turning point in zoological thought in medieval Islamic education as they so remarkably reflected early concepts of natural selection [5,6].

SJIF Impact Factor (2025): 8.688| ISI I.F. Value: 1.241| Journal DOI: 10.36713/epra2016 ISSN: 2455-7838(Online)
EPRA International Journal of Research and Development (IJRD)
Volume: 10 | Issue: 6 | June 2025 - Peer Reviewed Journal

Renaissance and Early Modern Zoology

The Renaissance was a watershed moment in anatomical discoveries, lead by Andreas Vesalius (1514-1564), whose De humani corporis fabrica transformed the study of human and comparative anatomy via comprehensive empirical dissections [7]. Carl Linnaeus' 18th-century Systema Naturae revolutionized taxonomy by providing a standardized binomial naming scheme for classifying organisms into species and genus [8]. Jean-Baptiste Lamarck (1744-1829) advanced biological thought by proposing early evolutionary ideas emphasizing the inheritance of acquired traits, Georges Cuvier (1769–1832) laid the foundation for comparative anatomy and pioneered palaeontology, significantly advancing the understanding of functional morphology [9,10]. Building upon these foundational concepts, Charles Darwin later published On the Origin of Species (1859), presenting a comprehensive, evidence-driven theory of evolution through natural selection that profoundly transformed zoological science and research methodologies [11].

ZOOLOGY IN THE MOLECULAR AGE

The Rise of Genetics and Developmental Biology

The Modern Synthesis, which combined genetics, evolution, and natural selection, was sparked by Gregor Mendel's discovery of heredity in the 20th century. This unified fields, elucidated evolution mechanisms, and paved the way for molecular biology and biotechnology advancements, shaping modern biological research [12,13]. Subsequent developments in molecular biology shed light on the metabolic basis of life, including Watson and Crick's 1953 discovery of the DNA double helix structure [14]. With the help of noteworthy genome projects like Drosophila melanogaster and Caenorhabditis elegans, zoologists have used this technology for phylogenetic analysis, revealing evolutionary links between species [15,16].

Imaging and Neurobiology Advances

The advent of electron microscopy transformed zoology by exposing cellular and subcellular structures with unprecedented detail [17]. Advanced imaging methods, such as confocal microscopy and MRI, have provided additional insights into animal anatomy and physiology [18]. Understanding brain function, memory, and learning processes has advanced significantly as a result of precise mapping of neural circuits and behavioral pathways across species made possible by advances in neurobiology. This has also opened new avenues for treating neurological disorders, developing advanced prosthetics, and brain-computer interfaces. [19, 20].

FRONTIERS IN MODERN ZOOLOGY

Integrative and Comparative Genomics

Through the use of comparative genomics, zoologists may determine the evolutionary paths and functional adaptations of various species [21]. Research on extremophiles, like tardigrades, has revealed unique genes that offer defense against extreme radiation and desiccation [22]. Additionally, pan-genomic studies have emerged, enabling thorough comparisons across groups and providing greater insights into mechanisms of biodiversity conservation, adaptive evolution, and speciation [23].

Evolutionary Developmental Biology (Evo-Devo)

Evolutionary transformations are driven by changes in developmental processes, which are the subject of evolutionary developmental biology (Evo-Devo) [24]. The underlying molecular frameworks that determine animal body plans and variety are revealed by important discoveries, such as the uncovering of conserved genetic toolkits like Hox gene clusters [25]. Our comprehension of evolutionary trends across metazoans is improved by these findings, which show that minor genetic changes in regulatory networks may result in notable morphological novelties [26].

Conservation Biology and Biodiversity Informatics

Zoology is now at the forefront of conservation research due to the rapid decline of biodiversity [27]. For the purpose of directing conservation efforts, zoologists assess genetic diversity and population structure using molecular markers such as microsatellites and single nucleotide polymorphisms [28]. Breeding and habitat management initiatives for severely endangered species, including the Sumatran orangutan (Pongo abelii), have been driven by genetic investigations [29]. Combining genomes and ecological data enhances the design of successful conservation interventions, ensuring the preservation of evolutionary potential and resistance to environmental change [30]. Emerging tools like environmental DNA (eDNA) enable non-invasive detection of elusive species, dramatically transforming biodiversity monitoring and conservation strategies by providing rapid, cost-effective assessments of ecosystem health [31].

Synthetic Biology and Bioinformatics: Transforming Zoological Research

The rapidly developing multidisciplinary area of synthetic biology focuses on creating new biological systems or reprogramming already-existing organisms [32]. Synthetic biology has created new opportunities in zoology by enabling scientists to precisely control intricate features in both model and non-model species. Synthetic gene drives, genetic systems that alter inheritance patterns, are crucial for managing species and disease vectors. They can rapidly spread desirable traits or suppress harmful populations, but raise ethical and ecological concerns. One possible approach to preventing vector-borne illnesses is the use of modified mosquitoes,

SJIF Impact Factor (2025): 8.688| ISI I.F. Value: 1.241| Journal DOI: 10.36713/epra2016 ISSN: 2455-7838(Online)
EPRA International Journal of Research and Development (IJRD)
Volume: 10 | Issue: 6 | June 2025 - Peer Reviewed Journal

which have been developed to decrease the spread of malaria [33]. De-extinction is another revolutionary use of synthetic biology, in which improved cloning or genome-editing techniques are used to reconstruct genomes and reintroduce features in extinct animals. Prominent attempts to restore animals like the woolly mammoth (Mammuthus primigenius) demonstrate the method's technological capabilities and possibilities for conservation [34]. Additionally, by making it possible to rebuild animal tissues and organoids in vitro, bio fabrication technologies such as 3D bio printing are transforming zoological study. These systems offer advanced models for researching disease etiology, developmental biology, and evolutionary processes outside of living things [35]. Despite its revolutionary potential, synthetic biology raises important ethical and ecological questions. Unintended ecological effects, such as gene drive propagation beyond of target populations or the disturbance of pre-existing ecosystems, are examples of potential hazards. Furthermore, the resuscitation of extinct species raises moral questions about resource allocation and ecological objectives. In order to ensure responsible and sustainable uses, synthetic biology requires strong regulatory frameworks and multidisciplinary discussion as it becomes more and more integrated into conservation and zoological research [36].

The field of bioinformatics has become a vital tool for evaluating and interpreting vast amounts of biological data, revolutionizing zoological research [37]. From model organisms to elusive animals, genomic studies of a broad variety of species have become more accessible thanks to developments in high-throughput sequencing methods. Through comparative genomics studies enabled by bioinformatics pipelines, these technologies enable the creation of massive datasets that shed light on evolutionary relationships, adaptive traits, and speciation events [38]. Ecological genomics has found that bioinformatics tools are essential. Even in difficult contexts, metagenomics and environmental DNA (eDNA) sequencing methods mostly rely on computer algorithms to discover and track biodiversity non-invasively [31]. By making it possible to identify species and analyse the makeup of communities without the requirement for direct observation or capture, these techniques have completely transformed conservation biology. In order to model species distributions under different climate change scenarios, predict ecological interactions, and automate species identification, machine learning algorithms are being incorporated into bioinformatics workflows more and more [39]. Large and complicated datasets can be processed quickly and efficiently by these AI-driven tools, which can also reveal patterns that conventional statistical techniques frequently miss. Single-cell transcriptomic and spatial omics, which offer previously unheard-of resolution in mapping gene expression across various tissues and developmental stages, are two areas in developmental biology where bioinformatics is essential [40]. Complex computational methods are needed to integrate, visualize, and interpret these high-dimensional datasets. Bioinformatics and artificial intelligence are coming together to speed up zoological research. With their growing sophistication, predictive models of animal behaviour, evolutionary dynamics, and ecosystem functioning provide strong instruments for formulating hypotheses and designing experiments. As zoology embraces these technological advancements, bioinformatics will remain essential to the expansion of biological knowledge and conservation efforts. [41].

Technological Catalysts in Zoological Research

By facilitating accurate gene knockouts and the creation of gene drives, CRISPR-Cas9 genome editing has transformed functional genomics in zoology and offered new insights into gene function, adaptation, and evolutionary processes [42.43]. Applications include understanding developmental processes and controlling disease vectors and invasive species. At the same time, large-scale data collection and pattern recognition are made possible by computerized image analysis, behavioral monitoring, and predictive ecological modeling, which are transforming zoological research [44, 45]. By enabling high-resolution profiling of gene expression at the cellular and tissue levels, developments in single-cell RNA sequencing and spatial transcriptomic technologies have enhanced our comprehension of developmental biology, cellular heterogeneity, and organismal physiology [46,47]. When combined, these technologies are revolutionizing zoological research in the future.

Future Perspectives

Table 1 outlines the major tools and technologies that have shaped zoology over time. Zoology is making a substantial contribution to the development of the ideas of planetary health by emphasizing the relationships between the health of people, animals, and ecosystems. When it comes to solving urgent issues like the rise of zoonotic diseases, biodiversity loss, and improving climate resilience, zoologists are at the forefront [48]. Synthetic ecology and de-extinction technologies are being researched concurrently to engineer resilient ecosystems and restore lost biodiversity, providing new approaches to conservation in a changing world [49]. To ensure ecological integrity, balance scientific innovation with biodiversity stewardship, and put the welfare of all living things first, ethical and philosophical frameworks are required. These frameworks can assist researchers in resolving ethical dilemmas, preventing unforeseen repercussions, and promoting a positive correlation between environmental preservation and scientific growth [50].

SJIF Impact Factor (2025): 8.688| ISI I.F. Value: 1.241| Journal DOI: 10.36713/epra2016 ISSN: 2455-7838(Online)
EPRA International Journal of Research and Development (IJRD)
Volume: 10 | Issue: 6 | June 2025 - Peer Reviewed Journal

Table 1. Key Tools and Technologies Shaping Zoology Through the Ages

Tool/Technology	Application in Zoology
Dissection and Comparative Anatomy	Structural studies of animal bodies, early functional insights
Microscopy (Light, Electron)	Discovery of cellular structures; ultrastructure analysis
Taxonomy (Binomial Nomenclature)	Standardized classification of species
Palaeontology (Fossil Record Analysis)	Reconstruction of evolutionary history, extinct species studies
Natural Selection Theory	Foundation of evolutionary biology; species adaptation theories
Genetics (Mendelian Laws)	Inheritance mechanisms; foundation of modern genetics
Modern Synthesis	Integration of genetics and evolution
DNA Structure Discovery	Molecular basis of heredity
Electron Microscopy	High-resolution imaging of cells, tissues
Molecular Phylogenetic	Clarifying evolutionary relationships via DNA/RNA comparisons
Genome Sequencing (e.g., C. elegans, Drosophila)	Model organism genomics; gene function elucidation
Comparative Genomics	Evolutionary biology; gene family analysis across taxa
Single-cell RNA Sequencing	Cell-type diversity studies; developmental biology
Environmental DNA (eDNA)	Biodiversity monitoring; non-invasive species detection
CRISPR-Cas9	Precise gene editing; functional genomics; gene drives
3D Bio printing	Regenerative zoology; organoid modelling
Gene Drives	Population control strategies (e.g., malaria vectors)
Synthetic Biology	Engineering novel biological systems; de-extinction projects
Spatial Transcriptomic	Gene expression mapping within tissue architecture
Metagenomics	Ecosystem and microbiome studies
Ontogenetic	Neural circuit mapping; behaviour studies
Organoid Technology	Modelling organ systems; studying development and disease
Artificial Intelligence (AI)	Automated species identification; ecological pattern recognition
Bioinformatics Pipelines	Omics data integration; large-scale genome annotation
Systems Biology Modelling	Predictive modelling of biological responses; systems-level integration

CONCLUSION

With roots in early human endeavours to comprehend nature, zoology has developed into a dynamic, integrated field that is essential to contemporary biology. Zoology continues to shed light on the complexity of life, from Aristotle's taxonomy of animals to CRISPR-edited genomes and AI-driven ecological monitoring. A key discipline in contemporary biology, zoology has developed into a vibrant, integrated field that tackles intricate ecological and biological problems. Its contribution to synthetic ecology, conservation genomics, and planetary health is essential for halting the loss of biodiversity and reducing the risk of illness. However, in order to promote responsible stewardship of life, ethical and philosophical frameworks must change as scientific capabilities advance. International attempts to practice planetary stewardship will be guided by this dynamic evolution.

REFERENCES

1. Clottes J, Lewis-Williams D. The Shamans of Prehistory: Trance and Magic in the Painted Caves. New York: Harry N. Abrams; 1998.
2. Aristotle. Historia Animalium. Translated by D'Arcy Wentworth Thompson. Oxford: Clarendon Press; 1910.
3. Lennox JG. Aristotle's Philosophy of Biology: Studies in the Origins of Life Science. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press; 2001.
4. Mayr E. The Growth of Biological Thought: Diversity, Evolution, and Inheritance. Cambridge: Harvard University Press; 1982.
5. Pliny the Elder. Naturalis Historia. Translated by H Rackham. Cambridge: Harvard University Press; 1938.
6. Al-Jahiz. Kitab al-Hayawan (The Book of Animals). Translated excerpts in Pellat C. The Life and Works of Jahiz. Berkeley: University of California Press; 1969.
7. Vesalius A. De humani corporis fabrica libri septem. Basel: Johannes Oporinus; 1543.
8. Linnaeus C. Systema Naturae. 10th ed. Stockholm: Laurentius Salvius; 1758.

SJIF Impact Factor (2025): 8.688| ISI I.F. Value: 1.241| Journal DOI: 10.36713/epra2016 ISSN: 2455-7838(Online)
EPRA International Journal of Research and Development (IJRD)
Volume: 10 | Issue: 6 | June 2025 - Peer Reviewed Journal

9. Lamarck JB. Philosophie Zoologique. Paris: Dentu; 1809.
10. Cuvier G. Le Règne Animal Distribué d'après Son Organisation. Paris: Déterville; 1817.
11. Darwin C. On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection. London: John Murray; 1859.
12. Mendel G. Versuche über Pflanzen-Hybriden. Verhandlungen des Naturforschenden Vereins Brünn. 1866;4:3–47.
13. Dobzhansky T. Genetics and the Origin of Species. New York: Columbia University Press; 1937.
14. Watson JD, Crick FH. Molecular structure of nucleic acids: A structure for deoxyribose nucleic acid. Nature. 1953 Apr;171(4356):737–738.
15. The C. elegans Sequencing Consortium. Genome sequence of the nematode C. elegans: A platform for investigating biology. Science. 1998 Dec;282(5396):2012–2018.
16. Adams MD, Celniker SE, Holt RA, Evans CA, Gocayne JD, Amanatides PG, et al. The genome sequence of Drosophila melanogaster. Science. 2000 Mar;287(5461):2185–2195.
17. Porter KR, Blum J. A study of tissue culture cells by electron microscopy: methods and preliminary observations. J Exp Med , March 1945; 81(3):233-46.
18. Pawley JB, editor. Handbook of Biological Confocal Microscopy. 3rd ed. New York: Springer; 2006.
19. Lichtman JW, Denk W. The big and the small: Challenges of imaging the brain's circuits. Science. 2011 Nov;334(6056):618–623.
20. Zuo Y, Lin A, Chang P, Gan WB. Development of long-term dendritic spine stability in diverse regions of cerebral cortex. Neuron. 2005 Jul;46(2):181–189.
21. Jarvis ED, Mirarab S, Aberer AJ, Li B, Houde P, Li C, et al. Whole-genome analyses resolve early branches in the tree of life of modern birds. Science. 2014;346(6215):1320–1331.
22. Boothby TC, Tapia H, Brozena AH, Piszkiewicz S, Smith AE, Giovannini I, et al. Tardigrades use intrinsically disordered proteins to survive desiccation. Mol Cell. 2017;65(6):975–984.e5.
23. Golicz, Agnieszka A. et al. Pangenomics Comes of Age: From Bacteria to Plant and Animal Applications. Trends in Genetics, Volume 36, Issue 2, 132 - 145
24. Carroll SB. Evo-Devo and an expanding evolutionary synthesis: A genetic theory of morphological evolution. Cell. 2008;134(1):25–36.
25. Holland PW. Evolution of homeobox genes. Wiley Interdiscip Rev Dev Biol. 2013;2(1):31–45.
26. Davidson EH. The regulatory genome: gene regulatory networks in development and evolution. Burlington: Academic Press; 2006.
27. Ceballos G, Ehrlich PR, Dirzo R. Biological annihilation via the ongoing sixth mass extinction signaled by vertebrate population losses and declines. Proc Natl Acad Sci USA. 2017;114(30):E6089–E6096.
28. Allendorf FW, Hohenlohe PA, Luikart G. Genomics and the future of conservation genetics. Nat Rev Genet. 2010;11(10):697–709.
29. Goossens B, Chikhi L, Ancrenaz M, Lackman-Ancrenaz I, Andau P, Bruford MW. Genetic signature of anthropogenic population collapse in orangutans. PLoS Biol. 2006;4(2):e25.
30. Supple MA, Shapiro B. Conservation of biodiversity in the genomics era. Genome Biol. 2018;19(1):131.
31. Deiner K, Bik HM, Mächler E, Seymour M, Lacoursière-Roussel A, Altermatt F, et al. Environmental DNA metabarcoding: Transforming how we survey animal and plant communities. Mol Ecol. 2017;26(21):5872–5895.
32. Cameron DE, Bashor CJ, Collins JJ. A brief history of synthetic biology. Nat Rev Microbiol. 2014;12(5):381–390.
33. Burt A. Heritable strategies for controlling insect vectors of disease. Philos Trans R Soc Lond B Biol Sci. 2014;369(1645):20130432.
34. Shapiro B. Pathways to de-extinction: How close can we get to resurrecting an extinct species? Funct Ecol. 2017;31(5):996–1002.
35. Murphy SV, Atala A. 3D bioprinting of tissues and organs. Nat Biotechnol. 2014;32(8):773–785.
36. Esvelt KM, Smidler AL, Catteruccia F, Church GM. Concerning RNA-guided gene drives for the alteration of wild populations. eLife. 2014;3:e03401.
37. Mangul S, Martin LS, Eskin E, Blekhman R. Challenges and recommendations to improve the installability and archival stability of omics computational tools. PLoS Biol. 2019;17(6):e3000333.
38. Lewin HA, Robinson GE, Kress WJ, Baker WJ, Coddington J, Crandall KA, et al. Earth BioGenome Project: Sequencing life for the future of life. Proc Natl Acad Sci USA. 2018;115(17):4325–4333.
39. Bohan DA, Vacher C, Tamaddoni-Nezhad A, Raybould A, Dumbrell AJ, Woodward G. Next-generation global biomonitoring: Large-scale, automated reconstruction of ecological networks. Trends Ecol Evol. 2017;32(7):477–487.
40. Tang F, Barbacioru C, Wang Y, Nordman E, Lee C, Xu N, et al. mRNA-Seq whole-transcriptome analysis of a single cell. Nat Methods. 2009;6(5):377–382.
41. Schneider S, Taylor GW, Linquist S, Kremer SC. Past, present and future approaches using computer vision for animal re-identification from camera trap data. Methods Ecol Evol. 2019;10(4):461–470
42. Doudna JA, Charpentier E. The new frontier of genome engineering with CRISPR-Cas9. Science. 2014;346(6213):1258096.
43. Gantz VM, Bier E. The mutagenic chain reaction: A method for converting heterozygous to homozygous mutations. Science. 2015;348(6233):442–444.
44. Norouzzadeh MS, Nguyen A, Kosmala M, Swanson A, Palmer MS, Packer C, et al. Automatically identifying, counting, and describing wild animals in camera-trap images with deep learning. PNAS. 2018;115(25):E5716–E5725.
45. Schneider S, Taylor GW, Linquist S, Kremer SC. Past, present and future approaches using computer vision for animal re-identification from camera trap data. Methods Ecol Evol. 2019;10(4):461–470.
46. Tang F, Barbacioru C, Wang Y, Nordman E, Lee C, Xu N, et al. mRNA-Seq whole-transcriptome analysis of a single cell. Nat Methods. 2009;6(5):377–382.
47. Stahl PL, Salmen F, Vickovic S, Lundmark A, Navarro JF, Magnusson J, et al. Visualization and analysis of gene expression in tissue sections by spatial transcriptomics. Science. 2016;353(6294):78–82.

SJIF Impact Factor (2025): 8.688| ISI I.F. Value: 1.241| Journal DOI: 10.36713/epra2016 ISSN: 2455-7838(Online)
EPRA International Journal of Research and Development (IJRD)
Volume: 10 | Issue: 6 | June 2025 - Peer Reviewed Journal

48. Destoumieux-Garzón D, Mavingui P, Boetsch G, Boissier J, Darriet F, Duboz P, et al. The One Health Concept: 10 Years Old and a Long Road Ahead. Front Vet Sci. 2018;5:14.
49. Shapiro B. Pathways to de-extinction: How close can we get to resurrecting an extinct species? Funct Ecol. 2017;31(5):996–1002.
50. Sandler R. The Ethics of Reviving Long Extinct Species. Conserv Biol. 2013;27(4):690–696.